

Meet the Hoosier Energy Economic Development Staff

Mike Rampley

Mike Rampley, Senior Vice President of Marketing and Business Development, is the corporate leader of Hoosier Energy's economic development program. Mike knows the Economic Development Department very well because he managed it for many years.

During the department's formative years, Mike's leadership earned it substantial respect from peers and generated remarkable success. Among other achievements, Mike created a database of economic development sites within our member systems' service territories. He helped many of our largest customers build new plants and expand their businesses.

Mike brings his experience with an understanding of transportation issues to the team. His career includes service as an economic development project manager at Conrail, a project manager at the Transportation Institute of the Indiana University School of Business, and director of the Indiana Transportation Planning Office.

Mike also remains active in rural economic development. He belongs to several professional organizations and has served on the boards of the Indiana Rural Development Council (IRDC), the Southern Indiana Rural Development Project (SIRDP), and the National Rural Economic Development Association (NREDA).

Mike earned his bachelor's and master's degrees from Indiana University.
